HANF, NANA, and Akima provide Elders with security, comfort during COVID-19

Two Alaska Native Elders wear their #NotTodayCovid shirts.

The Healthy Alaska Natives Foundation (HANF) believes that health care goes beyond the bounds of treating those who are sick. This has never been more important than right now in the midst of COVID-19.

We want to help Alaskans stay out of the hospital in the first place.

Together, with NANA and Akima (NANA's federal group of companies), HANF recently partnered with the Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium's (ANTHCs) Community Health Aide Program to create and distribute 1,000 Elder Self Care Kits to Alaska Native Elders throughout the state.

Each kit contains:

- A pulse oximeter to assess oxygen saturation and pulse
- A thermometer to assess temperature
- Small Vital Signs Card
- Individual Monitoring Log
- Brief instruction sheet

Elders and their caregivers can record their health information, helping ensure they receive optimal, informed healthcare during the COVID-19 pandemic.

"I felt an extra sense of security when I received the Elder Self Care Kit. I use the thermometer and the finger pulse oximeter a few times a week. This was so thoughtful of you to provide this kit to us, we appreciate it," Maria Stowe a recipient expressed her gratitude.

The Elder Self Care Kits were made possible by donations to HANF's Area of Greatest Need Fund. The Area of Greatest Need Fund is a collection of unrestricted funds which allow us to respond quickly to unexpected needs and challenges in any program across the Alaska Tribal Health System (ATHS).
